DEDICATED to the memory of Martin McBurney QC RM, whose cruel murder on 16 September 1974 deprived us of a true Justice of the People.

I wish to acknowledge with gratitude the huge assistance given by William and Monty Murphy, by the late Desmond McMullan, of Heather Semple, Librarian of the Law Society of Northern Ireland, Terence Bowman, editor of the Mourne Observer, in addition to the countless friends who proffered advice and assistance without which this book could never have been published; in addition to the encouragement of Ann, my wife throughout the long period in which this work was done.

THE CASTLEWELLAN COURT BOOK 1824

THE BOOK ITSELF

This book is one of three books, of which it is the only one not in the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland, which survive from this period¹ and therefore these are an invaluable source of information on the conduct of such courts in Ireland, their impact on the common people of Ireland, and the enthusiasm with which the common people embraced this apparently easy access to justice to redress their wrongs.

The Castlewellan Court Book 1824 bears all the hallmarks of the 19th century officialdom it represents. It is bound in cardboard covers with leather corners and leather spine-binding, and it is lined with tortoise-shell paper in brown, grey and black. It measures 15 inches by 9½ inches and is 2 inches thick. The passing years have scuffed the cover in places. The book is well-preserved for its age. The binding is intact. A piece of red leather with gold letters thereon has become detached from the front of the book and been stuck back on with sellotape. This bears the inscription, inside an edge of gold vine-scrolls,

CASTLEWELLAN COURT BOOK 1824.

The book itself is not yet in the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland, although I did persuade the owner to permit me to deposit a photocopy there before I finished making my own copy. Accordingly, since 1982 the book has been "officially" known.

Little is really known about the history of the book since the clerk to the justices², John Hanna, made the last entry in it until it "appeared" on my desk. There is a story told, probably apocryphal, that the late Martin McBurney QC, a Resident Magistrate, found the book in a drawer in the court house in Castlewellan while presiding over the last, or one of the last, sittings of the Petty Sessions Court in the old Market House in the Upper Square in Castlewellan. It is inconceivable that a member of the magistracy would purloin such a piece of history and then present it to a friend of his who was a local historian

There is an anomaly here. The SR&O which provided that the sittings of the petty sessions court for the district of Castlewellan be removed to Newcastle was not signed until 4 July 1997. It was not brought into effect immediately. The last sittings at the Courthouse in the Upper Square were not held until 29 March 1979. Poor Mr. McBurney was murdered in September 1974. I believe that the Book had left the Courthouse by that date.

I first heard of the existence of this book as a "rumour", then succeeded in tracking down the owner and obtaining his blessing for me to make a copy and write up the information that it contained. Like all owners of rare works, the owner did not so much want to prevent the book from being read, but rather feared that he might lose the original, of which he was fond.

The book is printed in six columns, each column bearing the title I have shown in my copy, and was to be filled in by the court clerk. The book as printed is for writing in landscape mode, to use modern parlance, rather than portrait mode.

The entries made by the court clerk in the book are in brown ink. All seem to be the work of one clerk. Except in those instances where I have shown the contrary, the first six columns are always completed by the clerk. He usually writes with due care, but sometimes the haste with which the entries were made is apparent and suggests that the summons in question was entered at the sitting of the court rather than the day before in preparation for the court. The final column is for the chairman of the magistrates to enter the judgment of the court, and the writing of this column varies with the chairmanship of the sittings.

The handwriting of the clerk does develop somewhat during the course of the book, as if this were to be expected with the passage of time.

Generally I have no difficulty in reading the clerk's writing. However, it is not always possible to tell the difference between his upper case L and S. There is little to distinguish these with the naked eye, and I have to rely as far as possible on the sense of the entry. Also, his lower case i and e are alike. He does sometimes dot his i - but not always - and, as there are sometimes small blots of ink on the paper, at times I have had difficulty in telling these two letters apart.

The first column is the serial number of the summons³. The second is the name of the Complainant, the third the name of the Defendant. Usually the townland in which the parties reside is shown by way of address for identification. The fourth column shows the cause of action, in civil matters, or in criminal, the offence alleged, the fifth the name of the magistrate who issued the summons.

All these particulars would have been before the clerk on the original summons, with particulars of service endorsed on the rear, as he made the entry into the book. He left the final sixth column blank for the chairman of the magistrates to enter the Judgment and Observations of the court.

Over three thousand persons are named. These names show some duplication. Such a large number of entries gives us an insight into the public life of the area during the two years covered by the book.

Because of its being absent from the Public Record Office of Ireland in 1922 the Book and its two extant companions have survived the destruction of the public records in the Four Courts blaze. This book is one of three surviving examples of what historians and lawyers today have left of the records of the operation of the petty sessions courts in the whole of Ireland in the first half of the Nineteenth Century.

With its companion volumes the books cover the years from 1823 to 1828. The two companion volumes have found their way into the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland and are indeed suitable for publication as companion volumes to the present work. The first covers the period from 23rd August 1823 until 11th October 1824 and contains 1262 entries⁴. The book is a little battered. The third book is in poor condition, with covers and spine missing. It commences on 9th October 1826 and contains 1578 entries, the date of the last court being 3rd November 1828⁵.

The similarities and differences are best discussed in any subsequent publication. That all three books relate to the same Petty Sessions Court and are consecutive makes these surviving records all the more valuable.

My purpose in publishing the present work now is because of the fact that it is in private hands rather than in the public domain, and thus should be made easily available to historians of law and of Irish social history. Genealogists may also find it of some interest.

THE AGE IN WHICH THE BOOK WAS WRITTEN

The Ireland in which the book was written was a different world from that which we know today. The civil law was cumbersome and often inept; the criminal, cruel and exacting. Taxation took the form of tithes and county cess levied on the tenants and owners of land, and excise duties were charged on the simple peasant pastimes of drinking alcoholic beverages and smoking tobacco.

Direct rule from Westminster had been applied to the country only twenty-three years before. The Act of Union of 1800 was seen by many at Westminster at that time as a way of curing Ireland's problems by the dissolution of Gratten's Parliament. The cure was, however, slow in arriving. The French Wars had ended at the Battle of Waterloo and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland had been at peace for nine years. The Roman Catholic Relief Act of 1793⁶ had attempted to give equality before the law to the majority community, and Daniel O'Connell's efforts to further that "relief" with Emancipation had not escaped the attention of the people of County Down.

The economy of the country was primitive by modern standards. Banking was in its infancy. The Northern Banking Company Limited was established the year the book was written; the Bank of Ireland had been established 41 years before. Coin and bank-notes were scarce and barter still held a prominent place in the commercial dealings of the farming community. Irish (pre-Union) currency still circulated freely with its British counterparts and exchanged at 13: 12½. It is not till 1826 that the Irish currency was finally abolished.

The advent of peace in 1815 had given an opportunity at Westminster for the consideration of a number of reforms of the legal system in Ireland.

In 1820 Sir Robert Peel undertook the reform of the constabulary in Ireland. Then, after the date of the Book, the whole structure of the courts of petty sessions in Ireland were to be formalised, commencing with the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act 1827⁷ and continuing until the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act 1851, which was to form the basis for these courts for the next 100 years.

Regular events punctuated the even pattern of daily life. The paying of rents on the lst May and lst November, the celebration of the Christian festivals of Christmas and Easter and the older mid-summer celebrations, fairs and church activities marked out the year.

The large number of assault summonses for events on the fair days (Mondays at Castlewellan), and on 1st day of February, 1st May, 1st June and 1st September, 13th November and the Tuesday before Christmas is evidence of the enthusiasm of the more bellicose members of the community for any excuse for a scrap. Drink seems to have been a common feature of the fair day, the market day and the principal feasts.

There is however, another social tension in the community. This was called "the Bread and Butter Reformation". Lord Roden assisted by the Rev. A.W. McCreight and his mother, Mrs McCreight of Tollymore House, Newcastle and McCreight's sister, Mrs Isabella Keown of Tollymore, had mustered a team of evangelists. James Hart of Cavan was one of them. Another of them, Mr Connellan, Hart's brother-in-law, was fluent in Irish, so he was sent to the "benighted papists of Foffany". Another evangelist was a Mr Erwin, a scripture reader.

Their efforts are illustrated by the deposition of William McNally of Bryansford, which I have reproduced in the Appendix from O'Laverty: *Diocese of Down and Connor*⁸. Clearly the allegations of William McNally against Edward King at Summons No. 750 and the allegations of Edward King of Clarkhill against Father George Dempsey, the Roman Catholic Curate of the Parish of Maghera, which we see at No. 752, are part of this social tension. These entries throw new light on Monsignor O'Laverty's story. Did Fr. George Dempsey and William McNally set up the Reformers to expose them publicly, and is the incident of 16 September 1825 part of this plan?

We see other human-interest stories scattered through the Book. We see the on-going saga of Edward Joseph Marsh, beginning at No. 405, and then at 590, 668, 669, 670, and the Summons No. 726 (with notes thereto).

And what is the full story behind Summons No. 456 where Mary Hagan of Maghera was found on the bed with John Magraw by Anne Carlisle very quiet and did not complain?

The few constables had a relatively easy task by today's standards. Keeping the roads open and clear of nuisance, keeping dogs from troubling the travellers on foot or horse on those roads, keeping the taverns closed from midnight to 7 a.m. and all day Sunday were their most urgent tasks. Only in 1823⁹ were they required by law to attend the sittings of the court and carry out the warrants and orders of the justices.

The weekly market was held on a Monday and that was the most appropriate day for the justices to assemble at Castlewellan to dispatch such business as needed their attention. Castlewellan was then the commercial centre of an area lying to the north-east of the Mourne Mountains, bounded on the west by the River Bann, on the east by the Isle of Lecale and on the north by Slieve Croob.

The perennial problems of family quarrels, neighbour disputes, trespassing cattle causing damage, the recovery of money due for wages or other bargains appear frequently in the pages of the Book. Landlords anxious that their game be not stolen nor their woods raided for firewood – or more sinister, for pikestaffs - nor their turf cut are found among the summonses.

This is also a world without clocks. Very few people owned a timepiece; most of the mill workers and estate workers were summoned to work on weekdays by the Factory Horn or the Estate Bell. On Sunday the Church Bell performed its task. Here there is no concept of wasting time, for, as the Poet said: they also serve who only stand and wait!

THE HISTORY OF CASTLEWELLAN AND ITS DESCRIPTION IN 1824

⁹ 3 Geo IV c.103

Caisleán an Mhuilinn may be the original Gaelic place name of Castlewellan. That in Irish means 'Castle of the Mill'. That is the official version of the name given by the Department of Posts and Telegraphs in Eolaí an Phoist, the Irish government's official Post Office Guide¹⁰.

However, another possibility is that the proper Gaelic version of the second element of the place name is Uidhilin, and that it was named after the Irish family who preceded the Magennis clan in that area. They were called in English *McQuillan*¹¹ and would have predated the mills by a considerable number of years. The difficulty with this element of the placename is that the third vowel in everyday speech is always short. With Uidhilín/Uidhilin one would expect a long or half-long vowel.

Caiseal is more likely as the first element in the place name than the more formal caisleán in view of the low military strategic importance of the place in antiquity and the absence of an any formal or informal reference to a Norman or post-Norman castle, such as there is nearby at Dundrum. Caiseal is the Irish word for a stone compound or farmhouse, and is a not-infrequent element in County Down place names. Many people today will automatically assume that the name 'Castlewellan' is associated with the Annesley Castle situated overlooking the lake in the forest park, but that castle is far too recent. However the place called Castlewellan, Caisleán or Caiseal an Mhuilinn, Caisleán or Caiseal Uidhilin, existed long before the Annesleys came to Ireland. The earlier spellings of the name of the town include Castlewillane, Castlewillan and Castlewillian. (Some of the older generation still pronounce it Castlewillin [i.e. Caselwillin])¹³.

In the 16th century Castlewellan was a stronghold of the Gaelic Irish Magennis [MacAongusa] family, although there is no mention of the place in the Crown grant of the estate to the Magennis on 22nd October 1613. The only reference to a "castle" associated with the Magennis family comes in 1603 in "Bodley's Visit to Lecale" when a messenger from the Crown stops off with "O Neill's woman" at a location some twelve miles from Downpatrick on the Dublin road. The lady in question was the daughter of the leader of the Magennis clan who was said¹⁴ to be married to Aodh Ó Néill. Lady Iveagh, her daughter, was still living there in 1641¹⁵.

Under King James I the Magennis land was seized by the Crown but later Phelim Magennis was granted 11 townlands in the parishes of Kilmegan and Kilcoo constituting the Manor of Castlewellan. Magennis could also hold a manor court and in return for the granting of lands and honours guaranteed his allegiance to the King. After the rebellion of 1641 his estate was again forfeited and subsequently restored.

PIGGOT & CO.'s Directory published in 1824 describes the Town of Castlewellan as a small market town in the County of Down 65 (Irish) miles north of Dublin, 15 east north east of Newry and 9 miles south west of Downpatrick.

This navigational style of description underlines the difficulty of road communication in Ireland at the time. Piggot & Co. continue

It give title of Baron to the family of Annesley who have a delightful residence with a large and well-improved demesne, beautifully skirted with wood, and ornamented with elegant gardens and pleasantly situated near a small lake. This charming place is encircled by romantic eminences, on the slope of one of which is erected an elegant temple ornamented with a spire...

Castlewellan belongs to the Parish of Kilmegan two miles distant where Parish Church and Chapel are situate; there are, however, two places of worship in the town, one belongs to the Seceders, the other to the Wesleyan Methodists.

The Roman Catholic chapels are at Clanvaraghan and Aghlisnafin.

The Market House is a good building with a lofty spire, a clock and a bell, and the dispensary is supported by public subscription.

Francis Annesley, M.P. of Thorganby, Yorkshire, and Castlewellan, Co. Down became one of 13 English 'Trustees' who benefited from the 'forfeiture' of Irish Estates by an English Act of Resumption passed in 1700. The founding of the Irish branch of the family is generally attributed to Francis Annesley, later Sir Francis, who by Royal grant, and also by purchase, acquired estates in many counties. He was Secretary of State in Ireland, Treasurer and Receiver- General of Irish Revenues and he also became Viscount Valentia in Co. Kerry and Baron Mountnorris in Co. Armagh. Among the many Royal grants received by him was the Manor of Cloughmaghericatt (now Clough) in Co. Down near the site of the present-day Castlewellan town, and the Castlewellan Estate of the Magennis family.

Richard born in 1628 was the first Annesley to appear in Co. Down. His descendant, also Francis Annesley, acquired the property at Castlewellan in 1741 and from that date onwards began to shape his estate into the form it is today. The Annesleys built a six-foot high wall round the estate (the wall is still largely intact today), reckoned to be nine miles long. Inside the walls the Annesleys planted out the whole area with trees and the outlines of the small confiscated farms are still evident at the start of the 21st century¹⁶. In 1751 Mrs. Mary Delanev¹⁷ wife of the Dean of Down wrote that the Anneslevs had walled in and planted with oak 350 acres of ground for a park. Near them is a large bleach yard and Mr. Annesley is going to build a town. The town of Castlewellan was laid out in two parts, in the style of a French town. By 1758 Mr. and Lady Annesley, [she was born Lady Anne Beresford], were effecting wonderful improvements, with above 120 labourers constantly employed, and £1,500 a year expended. His outhouses were built by then, three large courts; round the first... houses for all his carriages and over them his granaries, the next court are stables and cow-houses and over them haylofts; the third court two such barns as I never saw, floored with oak, and finished in the most convenient manner for all the purposes of winnowing...

The town was still in the course of construction in 1764 when William Annesley informed Henry Flood in a letter that the work will be a means of making Castlewellan a comfortable country village. The Market house as it stands today may well have been built by William Annesley, with the tower added later¹⁸. The old town (now Upper Square) was intended for Protestants¹⁹. The new town (Lower Square) was added about 1810, by which time the sectarian mind-set of the 18th century had ameliorated somewhat and tenancies were granted to Catholics there.

The town of Castlewellan in 1830²⁰ is described²¹ as "A market and post town in the parish of Kilmegan Co. Down, 9 miles from Downpatrick and 64 miles (Irish-miles) from Dublin, containing 728 inhabitants. It is on the mail coach road from Newry to Downpatrick, on the edge of a small lake, and though partly surrounded by mountains occupies a conspicuous site. The town is well build, and consists of an upper and lower square, connected by a street containing 122 houses. There are barracks for two companies of infantry. The bleaching of Linen, which is a principal industry of the place, was first introduced by Mr. Moffat in about 1749, since which time it has greatly increased and several large bleach greens have been made. Those of Messrs. Murland are capable of bleaching and finishing 20,000 pieces annually, and those of Mr. Steel 8,000. A large portion of the linen is sent to America and to the West Indies. There is a mill for spinning linen yarn established in 1829 -the first for fine yarns ever established in Ireland. It is worked by waterpower and lighted with gas on the premises. Another is in the course of erection on a very large scale, to be worked by a water wheel 50 feet in diameter. In these several establishments some 500 people are employed. There are also some large corn mills, and mills for the dressing of flax. The market is on Monday, and the market house in the upper square is a fine building, with a belfry and clock. A police station is situated there, and a courthouse and parish church. A schoolhouse was built by Mr. Murland and another by Lord Annesley. At the foot of the Slieve-na-lat, on the border of the lake, is an elegant house built by Lord Annesley, with fine pleasure gardens and a view. Earl Annesley has the title also of Baron of Castlewellan".

¹⁹ Ciarán Crilly, op. cit.

While this is slightly outside our period, it is nevertheless close enough to give us a detailed description of the town which must, by induction, have been largely true in 1824.

About the same time, in or around 1830^{22} , the Ordinance Survey Memoir reports: There is a court manor held in Castlewellan every three weeks. There are sometimes three magistrates in attendance. Captain Banny JP^{23} resides within a quarter of a mile of the town, is very much respected by the people. The usual number of police in Castlewellan, 4... There is a dispensary in Castlewellan and a school with 108 Protestants, 36 Catholics, 88 males and 56 females... The Hibernian Society gave 6d per scholar, each of whom paid 1d per week. The master and mistress were Protestants. The parish has 4051 Catholics, 1593 Protestants and 1215 Presbyterians. 25

The Market House, which is described as the Court House by *An Archaeological Survey of County Down*²⁶, the spire having given way to the present tower, was built by William Annesley in 1764, the tower being added in the early 19th Century.

The mail coach left the Post Office "for Dublin, Newry etc.etc." every evening at five and arrived "there in the morning at nine when the letters are dispatched to Clough, Downpatrick etc." A passenger coach went from Castlewellan every Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday to Newry at 12 noon, and to Downpatrick every Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 2.30. p.m.

*Lewis*²⁷ informs us that from being a town of 15 families (2 papist) in 1766. Castlewellan grew to have a population of 806 by 1841.

In 1824 linen was the commercial lifeblood of the district, as the number of references to linen in the Book confirms. James Murland of Annesborough and William Murland of Wood Lodge, Castlewellan had established mills for spinning linen yarn and the yarn for the most part was woven into linen fabric to the employment of a large section of the population.

Notwithstanding these outwards signs of prosperity, little money was in circulation. New building was expensive. A new Roman Catholic Chapel was

THE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

It is a most curious reversal of history that the regulation of marketing, now regarded as a matter for free enterprise, was originally a closely-guarded prerogative of the crown; whereas the administration of justice, now a prerogative of the crown, was originally left largely to private enterprise. The market system in Ireland, as in most of Europe, grew up by means of royal grants of monopolies to individuals. These monopolies were valuable, by virtue of the right to levy tolls on all who brought goods to market; they were guarded with great jealousy... The right to hold a fair or market was accompanied by the right to conduct a Court of Pie-Poudre, at which the steward adjudicated on commercial disputes and disturbances arising in the market; the cases had to be heard there and then; the court fees constituted a useful source of revenue for market owners... Justices of the Peace, unpaid amateurs, were supposed, in Ireland as in England, to provide the groundwork of the system; but this did not work well, for too many of the gentry were absentees, and too many of the justices were licensees. So the nineteenth century saw a steady erosion of the powers of justices of the peace in favour of salaried magistrates. Until their abolition in 1859, a bewildering network of manor courts and courts baron dealt with the less important civil cases. Their authority derived originally from crown grants to landowners: like the right to hold markets, they went with the premises. In many instances, the original grants or letters patent had been lost or forgotten, and there was uncertainty as to the jurisdiction (both territorial and pecuniary) they conferred²⁸.

²⁸ Court Houses and Market Houses of the Province of Ulster, C E B Brett, Ulster Architectural Heritage Society, 1973.

The arrival of the Petty Sessions Court system in Ireland is not clearly documented. Courts of Petty Sessions, at which justices of the peace met regularly to dispose of cases too trivial to return to the Quarter Sessions of the Peace, had been held in England in the last quarter of the 18th century, and some scant records survive from the 1770s on²⁹.

Around 1820 justices in Co. Cork appear to have begun the practice of regularly meeting as a group to deal mainly with minor criminal infractions. The idea spread ... and in the years 1823 and 1824 a pattern of countrywide petty sessions was installed³⁰.

In the opening decades of the 19th Century "justices were primarily responsible for what we now recognise to be functions properly belonging to the police: the prevention of disorder by their physical presence and the conduct of on-the-spot investigations into serious crimes"³¹.

The office of Justice of the Peace derives its origin from the England of Edward III, but in Ireland it only gradually came to the notice of the people as the Pale extended English law to the whole country. Ulster was the last province to have its system of native brehon law replaced by the Common Law, which only arrived after the Flight of the Earls in 1607³². By the end of the Williamite wars, the system of Quarter Sessions of the Peace had become fairly general. Each Justice of the Peace by his Commission of Appointment was designated Justice of the Peace in the particular county, usually that in which he resided and that was the limit of his jurisdiction. While one justice could issue a summons to bring a person charged with an offence or crime before the Justices, two or more Justices were required to hear and determine most matters.

The Justices of the Peace Act 1361³³ authorized justices of the peace in Quarter Sessions to hear and determine felony criminal cases. That Act also authorized justices, as they were now called (originally "keepers of the peace", from 1287), to arrest vagabonds in certain cases to punish them summarily. This power which truly made them justices (i.e. judges) had been given to them by the Crown as early as 1316 and had been removed or limited a number of times between then and 1364. From that time until the sixteenth century, when the assize courts began to restrict justices of the peace more and more to non-capital offenses, the Justice of the Peace had become the paramount legal officer on the county level, increasingly supplanting the Sheriff as chief police and chief judicial leader.

The difficulties of the proletariat in obtaining justice in 18th century Ireland are indicated by the following contemporary extract:-

If a peasant or farmer had a complaint to make to a justice, he might parade for hours, sometimes for days, before his worship's door, before he could gain a hearing; and if his complaint lay against a neighbouring squire or squireen, no summons for the latter could be procured but, perhaps, a sealed note inviting his attendance, to be humbly delivered to him by the complainant with his own hands. A distant day was then probably appointed for a hearing, when the defendant was received with friendly courtesy, while the plaintiff was suffered to resume his parade before the door until it suited the convenience of the justice to call him into the hall. If, then, his case was so clear, or so feebly opposed, as to necessitate a decree in his favour, the law provided another distant day for the settlement of his claim, allowing no compensation for the three or four days' time which, in all likelihood, he had lost in prosecuting the suit.

The law, thus administered in its primary processes, was executed, when necessary, by a barony constable, whose qualification for the duty was having received the sacrament at the parish church, and whose emoluments of office amounted to £4 a-year. The natural disposition of this functionary was, of course, to earn a shilling, or a glass of whiskey, or even a good word from the party against whom he might be entrusted with a warrant, by noticing him to keep out of his way³⁴.

The qualification for appointment as a justice of the peace was recognised as to be one of the best reputation and most worthy persons residing in the county. From initially having just a few justices, it became necessary for the dispatch of business of the courts to appoint more and more. Knowledge of the law was, unfortunately, not part of their requirement for appointment³⁵.

The Act of Union of 1800 brought "direct rule" to Ireland in 1801, and with it the greater organisation of the civil administration. This coincided with a flowering of statute law in England. Absenteeism among the landed gentry placed a great strain on the civil administration. To ease the dispatch of the business of the higher courts, there was an increase in the number of cases which by statute the justices were entitled to try in a summary way, rather than at the Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

This is the era of Sir Robert Peels' law reforms. Pillory was abolished in 1816, because the punishment is at the caprice of the multitude³⁶. Burning women convicted of capital offences, (as a more decent and humane punishment than hanging, drawing and quartering), was to be abolished in 1823. The judgment of burning alive, applied to women for certain crimes, was the savage remains of Norman policy and disgraced our statutes, said Sir Benjamin Hammet³⁷. Hanging was now regarded as more humane. The flogging in the public street of women was abolished in 1817, and slavery and slave-trading was finally abolished in the United Kingdom in 1824.

The early nineteenth century was not so much a period of greater lawlessness in Ireland but rather of greater awareness of the inherent aberrations of the native Irish and of the need to cause them to conform to the norm of their British counterparts. It may not have been merely coincidental that it was also a period in which the British and Overseas Mission Society printed the Bible in Irish for the salvation of the souls of those same native Irish.

From the growing pressures of judicial business the practice grew up of holding informal or petit/petty sessions of the justices for the dispatch of those items of business which they could or should discharge outside the Quarter Sessions or General Sessions of the Peace. From this grew the petty sessions jurisdiction of the justices. To quote Lord Cloncurry again: - This voluntary

By 1824 the functions exercised by the justices in Petty Sessions fell into the following main categories: -

- 1. issuing summons or summonses to compel the attendance of parties in proceedings before them and issuing warrants to compel the attendance where the summons was not answered.
- 2. examining the complaint to ascertain if it disclosed a cause sufficient for the attention of the justices in Quarter Sessions
- 3. if such a cause were sustained³⁹, granting an examination of the offender at which the information was reduced to writing and the witnesses bound over by a bail bond to attend the Quarter Sessions and prosecute the complainant under the pain of forfeiture of the bond
- 4. returning the written information forthwith to the Clerk of the Crown and Peace, as the permanent administrative officer of the Quarter Sessions was called. Failure to do this rendered the justice of the peace in default liable to a fine of Forty pounds no mean sum in those days and a heavy burden on the holder of a virtually gratuitous office. (Justices were entitled to small fees for issuing summonses, warrants, etc.)⁴⁰

³⁸ op.cit., capt. 10.

Writing a number of years later, Hamilton Smythe, The office of Justice of the Peace in Ireland, 1841 says

If the slightest case, even of suspicion, be made out against the accused, he should be asked by the justice if he has anything to say against the charge: he should not be put on his oath... A prisoner, when taken on suspicion before a justice, is to be allowed to speak voluntarily, and to give his account freely; and he ought not to be pressed to answer, examined, or questioned by the justice like a common witness... The examination is to be signed by the justice when drawn up, and ought indeed also to be signed by the prisoner, although the signature of the latter is not essential as that of the justice is.

I am indebted to John Killen, Assistant Librarian of Belfast's Linenhall Library, for showing me a notebook containing contemporary records of the fining of justices in the period 1800-1810 at Downpatrick. Fines were regularly imposed on justices in default, so this is no empty power.

- 5. issuing warrants to enable prosecutors to search for stolen goods or counterfeit coin, etc., illicit spirits and excisable goods.
- 6. hearing and determining in a summary fashion certain minor complaints delegated to them by statute. This aspect of the justices' work continued to grow so fast that each new manual printed for them was out-of-date within a short time. This was to become the most significant part of their work as far as the general public was concerned but not until a little after our period.

And all this slow and laborious writing out in longhand is being done by the clerk to the justices in the courtroom above while the pigs squealed and the dogs barked at the bottom of the stairs leading to this courtroom on the first floor of the Market House in the Upper Square at Castlewellan on an average market day.

THE PETTY SESSIONS OF THE PEACE

Petty Sessions were the informal meetings of the justices for the transaction of business which brought the parties in the various disputes before them. the time of the Castlewellan Court Book came to be written the Petty Sessions had developed into a Court for transacting the less serious criminal matters with which the justices could deal in a summary way, i.e., without a formal trial before a jury. The Petty Sessions could also examine complaints before their submission to the justices sitting at Quarter Sessions with a jury, issue warrants for the arrest of criminals and persons charged with a criminal offence and record the formal statements of evidence on oath (informations) for submission to the Quarter Sessions of the Peace. It was at these Quarter Sessions that the normal trials of criminal charges and the determination of certain limited civil issues were heard before the justices. In the early days of the nineteenth century, the Petty Sessions had also a civil jurisdiction in minor matters like labourers' wages and cattle trespass, and a criminal jurisdiction by statute in small matters in addition to the recording of informations for the The Castlewellan Court Book illustrates all of these Ouarter Sessions. functions well.

The justices were usually members of the landed gentry, and as such, generally Protestants. In theory, after the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1793 Roman Catholics could become justices of the peace⁴¹. Because many of the landed gentry were absent, not only from the county but also from Ireland much of the time, a grave burden was placed on those who remained and were available to serve. The notes on the attendances of the justices at the court at Castlewellan abstracted from the Book which appear below show the pattern of attendance of the County Down justices at Castlewellan. All this was to change. But at the time we are dealing with, to be eligible for appointment a person had to be the owner of lands of an annual value of at least £20.

At the time we are discussing there were no formal Petty Sessions Districts within a county⁴². As long as the justices met within the county that was sufficient. Every justice of the peace in the county was entitled to attend the various sessions. Thus the practice grew of holding the Court on the same day as a market or other regular event. In addition, the date of the next Court would be announced at the end of the sitting.

In this area of County Down we see petty sessions courts sitting at Rathfriland and Downpatrick as well as Castlewellan. It is reasonable to assume that the rest of the county was so divided and that, because of the difficulties of transport, petty sessions courts also sat in those areas which became petty sessions districts under the 1827 Act.

THE CONSTABULARY

The only general and permanent system of law enforcement in England at the beginning of the eighteenth century was provided at local level by the justices of the peace and their executive officers, the parish constables. JPs dealt with minor crime at quarter sessions and petty sessions. They were responsible for preserving public order, reading the Riot Act, calling in the military, issuing warrants, etc. The difference between the eighteen the century magistrate and his modern counterpart lay in the power to issue warrants as part of initiating a prosecution. In this way the eighteenth-century JP was more like a US district attorney or a French juge d'instruction...

42 The Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act 1827 was to change this.

⁴¹ Lord Cloncurry is an example of one.

The parish constable was the magistrate's subordinate and executive officer. Constables could police "night-walkers", gypsies, peddlers, fortune tellers, servants absent without leave, infractions on Sunday or gambling laws. They could punish mothers for bearing bastards, whip vagabonds, force the unwilling to work, uphold apprentice statutes, confine begging to those licensed to beg, restrain lunatics, and detain suspicious characters. They were also responsible for crime detection, raising the "hue and cry", apprehending criminals and housing them once detained. Here again the burden of work was oppressive. Often those eligible for office paid to escape the chore... Reluctance to serve as constable was compounded by financial penalties ordained for wrongful arrest or escape from custody 43.

Town and rural parishes were, according to law, required to appoint watchmen to patrol at night for several months of the year, but this requirement, if met at all, was met very unevenly, especially in the rural parishes.

For most of the hundred years down to 1922, most of Ireland outside of Dublin city was policed by a force which in 1867 became know as the Royal Irish Constabulary...The first forerunner of the RIC were the baronial police established in rural Ireland in 1773. Envisaged as a rural force to assist magistrates in executing warrants, collecting revenues and preserving the peace, these baronial police were not a success given their small numbers: in the 1780s there were only about 600 baronial police throughout all of Ireland. In 1787 the government instituted what it hoped would be a more efficient body in combating disorder in the Irish countryside. The 1787 Police Act⁴⁴ allowed for up to sixteen sub-constables per barony who were appointed by the county grand jury, and these sub-constables were commanded by a chief constable, appointed by the government. This new force replaced the existing baronial police...The rural police presence was added to in 1792 by the establishment of yet another baronial police appointed by the grand jury – the so-called "Barnies". Little is known of the 1792 force, apart from the fact that it had a limited presence (although more widespread than the 1787 force) and that it was ineffective.

⁴³ Crime and Punishment in Eighteenth Century England, Frank McLynn, Routledge, London, 1989.

⁴⁴ 27 Geo III c 42

Down to 1814, then, rural Ireland's police consisted of the inefficient 1792 baronial force, which maintained a not very active presence in, at most, twenty counties, and the 1787 force, which by 1814 was operating only in parts of Meath and Cork. To combat the widespread agrarian disorder of the period the chief secretary for Ireland, Robert Peel, succeeded in establishing yet another police body, the Peace Preservation Force: these were the first "Peelers"....

[1822] saw the beginning of the introduction of the County Constabulary in Ireland, and a subsequent decline in the strength of the Peace Preservation Force.

[This County Constabulary] was the most significant development in nineteenth century Irish police history...it was the first nation-wide, permanent Irish police force. ... It differed from the Peace Preservation Force in that it was to be permanently based in the towns, villages and townlands of Ireland...[It] was not as firmly under government direction as Goulburn [the Chief Secretary] had wished (justices of the peace, for example played a significant role in the appointment of sub-constables and in directing the activities of the force)...

One of the features which made the County Constabulary less centralized that its RIC descendant was the fact that there was no overall commander of the force. Instead, the County Constabulary was controlled by four provincial inspectors. This, combined with local magistrates' involvement in the force's affairs, meant that the standards of recruitment and discipline between each province were uneven. The force did not become centrally controlled until 1836⁴⁵.

From 1823⁴⁶ the constables were required to attend upon the justices at petty sessions and to execute their warrants and orders.

It is interesting to note that, just outside our period, in 1830 there were reportedly four constables based in Castlewellan⁴⁷.

THE PRACTICE AT PETTY SESSIONS IN 1824

The Complainant: Steps to be taken

The Complainant in 1824 intent on charging some person would first have to issue the summons to the Defendant giving the Defendant the details of the complaint against him/her. There was a court officer whose duty it was to issue the summons, namely the clerk of the court. The Complainant would therefore seek out the clerk at the Courthouse or other office⁴⁸ where he was to be found, and often with his assistance where the complainant was illiterate, fill out the form of summons in duplicate. The summons and copy were taken to the justice of the peace whose duty it was to issue the summons provided that he was satisfied that the complaint was genuine. In most cases I am sure that the clerk would have arranged for the justice to sign the summons and copy without the personal attendance of the complainant where the complainant was known personally to him or to the justice. The clerk would on issue of the summons take the fee, which at this time was 5d⁴⁹.

The summons had to be served personally on the Defendant, the person accused in the complaint. The summons might be served by a process server 50 or by the complainant. The fee for the process server to serve the summons was 1 s/Od at this time.

The confusion in the Book over the exact amount of the fees for the issue and service of a summons may reflect the continuance in everyday use of the two currencies, the Irish and the English, side by side at this time.

When the summons was served, either by a layman, such as the process server, the Complainant or his friend, or by a constable, the original, with the particulars of service endorsed thereon, showing the details of the date, place and manner of service, was brought back to the clerk, who would enter the summons in the Book. Those returned too late for entry in the Book in the usual way would be entered into the Book at the sitting of the Court, as would any summons directed to be issued by the justices during the court, as might happen where it was in their opinion appropriate to issue a summons for service on someone present at the court but implicated in some complaint⁵¹.

The Court Appearance

If both parties failed to appear before the justices on the day that the summons directed them to appear for the hearing of the complaint (the return day), then the case was marked "no appearance" after it was called in court. That was an end of the matter. If they appeared and announced to the court, when called, that the subject of the dispute between the parties had been settled or resolved in some way to the mutual satisfaction of the parties, then the word "settled" was written in the appropriate column in the Book. The practice of settling even the most serious criminal complaints is severely disapproved of by the legal authors of the period but it is clearly persisting in Castlewellan in our period, as the Book shows. The idea of a crime as an offence against a community rather than an individual injured party had not at that time obtained a general acceptance.

Some cases before the justices required special orders. Cattle trespass required the appointment by the parties, or in default by the justices, as appraisers or arbitrators to assess the damage, that is to say, to evaluate in cash the amount of money required to compensate the victim of the damage done by the cattle to crops and fences.

In the case of a felony or serious crime, if the justices were satisfied that the case was established, even by the slightest suspicion, they "granted an examination" of the offender, taking down the answer of the Defendant to the charge and the evidence of the various witnesses and returning the Defendant for trial to the next Quarter Sessions of the Peace. At this time remands were in custody as a general rule as the justices did not have a general power to admit a Defendant to bail. There were statutory exceptions to this, but it can generally be accepted that where the Book shows "examinations granted" or a like order, the Defendant was remanded in custody and carried off by a constable to Downpatrick Gaol. As he left the Courtroom he might observe the Complainant and his witnesses being bound in their own bail bond to attend the Quarter Sessions to prosecute the case and give the evidence which had been written down by way of informations.

A number of summonses in the Book show evidence of "late entry" from the handwriting of the clerk, which is much more hastily written than is normal with his neat copperplate.

Another order made is "informations taken". That seems to be of similar effect to the "examinations granted" and perhaps referred to lesser complaints. This may imply that the Defendant was not denied his liberty, but that on hearing the "information" of the "informer" the justices transferred the matter to the Quarter Sessions for hearing and determination. Another order which is perhaps of the same effect is "referred to sessions".

In each of the cases where the Defendant was remanded in custody, the constable would have received a warrant signed by the chairman of the bench directed to the governor of the gaol to receive and hold the prisoner and to produce him/her to the Quarter Sessions in due course. The nearest gaol to Castlewellan was of course at Downpatrick, the Old Gaol in The Mall, which still stands. Although now used as Down Museum the cells and the other offices of the gaol are still open to the public, and can be inspected today, much as they were in 1824⁵²

Failure on the part of the complainant or his witnesses to attend the Quarter Sessions in answer to their bond would mean not only the failure of the charge against the Defendant but the forfeiture of the sum of money in the bond by the absent party.

At this time prosecution of offences was in the hands of the general public. The Constables only prosecuted if directly involved or required by statute.

"Informer" is the general term used at the time for those who laid informations against another person. The word has since, in Ireland, taken on a more sinister meaning. The prosecutor, or "informer" in some cases was rewarded by statute by receiving one half of the fine or property recovered. The other half went to the Public Purse, often directed by the justices to be paid to the Churchwardens for the poor of the parish, or to the cess collectors, the local rates officers of the time, for the general financial benefit of the landowners of the County. An example of this is to be found in the Game Laws, the laws controlling the taking of game-birds, hares, deer etc. Trespassers with dogs and the owners of hunting dogs without licences, are to be fined if guilty. The fine in Section 2 of The Game (Ireland) Act 1691 is £5. There is no power to impose a lesser sum. Provisions like this encouraged the public, and in many cases that included the landlord's local agent, to enforce the law for his own benefit.

The practice of only one justice signing any warrant, information or other order seems to have been prevalent as it is expressly prohibited by the 1827 Act⁵³.

By 1824 the whole machinery for the administration of justice in Ireland was creaking at the seams. Overburdened justices of the peace had to ensure that there would be at least two of their number available each court day. One of them had to be available on a regular basis to issue summonses as required, and to bind over to keep the peace those likely to create a disturbance between sittings of the Court. The practice of a single justice having to act in any matter, save the issue of summonses, outside of petty sessions, is specifically dealt with in the 1827 Act⁵⁴ whereby such case had to be reported to the next sittings of the Petty Sessions.

The courts were filled with all sorts of disputes, and there is evidence in the Book that on some days the pressure of work simply meant that the cases were not all reached. The justices were also required to sit at the Quarter Sessions where the jury trials might take a long time indeed. One must remember that in those days before typewriters the manual transcription of the oral evidence into the deposition of the witnesses must have taken up a great deal of time. Finally the distance between courthouses and the state of the roads added to the difficulties. Remember that many of our modern roads through mid-Down were built after this date⁵⁵.

Accordingly, after 1827 modifications were made to the ancient system. The counties were divided into petty sessions districts. Then stipendiary magistrates were appointed to assist the justices. Later the stipendiary magistrate, sitting alone, was authorised to constitute a valid petty sessions for most purposes. By the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act 1851 the whole system of petty sessions courts, as we know them to day was set up, with a clerk of petty sessions, summons servers, petty sessions offices and standard printed forms. Police officers became the persons involved in investigating crime and prosecuting complaints and the rewards to "informers" began to disappear from the statute book.

What we see here in the Castlewellan Court Book is the very end of the old system which had been introduced into Ulster with the Common Law and which had come down, virtually unchanged from the reign of Edward III. All this began to die with the introduction of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act 1827 on 2 July 1827.

Throughout the reading of the Book, one must remember that prior to the introduction of the Criminal Evidence (Ireland) Act 1831, no person charged with an offence was competent under the Common Law to give evidence at all on his own behalf.

THE REPRESENTATION OF THE PARTIES

I can see no reference in the Book to the appearance of any attorneys or barristers before the justices at Castlewellan. The reference at No. 1310 to "P McMullan" is a reference to a local man, perhaps fluent in English at a time when the language of the majority was Irish, who appeared before the Bench to seek an adjournment of a summons on behalf of the party.

THE ALLEGATIONS

When we look through the Book we are struck, if I might be forgiven such a pun, by the frequency of the assaults as complaints. Next frequent we see breaches of contract or bargains including non-payment of wages, then larceny and fraud.

We should also be aware of those offences which the justices had power to deal with, which nevertheless are absent from the record. These include all the regulations of Inland Fisheries, the burning of land as an agricultural abuse, the regulation of the sale and the measure of grain, swearing, Sunday observance and the abuse of animals and apprentices.

Occasionally the charge may give rise to difficulty today, as in the case of "forestalling and regrating", a market offence of buying up all the produce of particular kind early in the day to restrict its availability and then re-selling it later in the day at a profit.

We do see instances of the justices using their power to bind over parties and witnesses to keep the peace, a power dating back to the dawn of the Common Law.

THE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR THE COUNTY OF DOWN AND TABLE OF COURTS

There were a total of 72 courts recorded in the Book over a period of 105 weeks. The total number of summonses listed is 1631, an average of 22.65 per court and 15.53 per week.

The Annesley family has provided the earls of Castlewellan since the reign of William III. Cloghmaghericatt is the official name of the barony, but the village of Clough, as it is now called, is not as distinguished as the new town of Castlewellan, built by the Annesleys on the high ground on the straight road from Clough to Kilcoo where it joined the Newcastle-Banbridge road. The Annesleys thus assumed the name of Castlewellan. They were also viscounts of Glerawley on account of an earlier connection with County Fermanagh.

When we first meet William Richard Annesley he is Viscount Glerawley. On the death of his father on 9 November 1824 he will become the 3rd Earl Annesley of Castlewellan. He had acquired the title of Viscount Glerawley when he attained the age of 21 years in 1793. It seems to have been a family tradition that the earl's eldest son was given that title on reaching his majority. Burke's Peerage tells us that William Richard Annesley, 3rd Earl of Castlewellan was born on 16 July 1772, so he is 52 years old when we first encounter him. He had been Member of Parliament for Downpatrick at Westminster from 1815 to 1820. He was Sheriff of Down in 1822⁵⁷. He does not have to travel far from the family seat above the town to the market square to attend the court. He died in 1874⁵⁸.

THE EARL OF RODEN

Robert, 3rd Earl of Roden, KP and MP for Louth at Westminster has a home at Dundalk House, Louth, as well as the family seat at Tollymore Park, Bryansford, Co. Down. He was born on 27 October 1788, five years younger than the Rev. William Annesley. The earls of Roden were the heirs to the last Gaelic lord of the area, Brian McHugh Mac Agholy Maginnes. Tollymore is one of seven and a half townlands granted to Maginnes by James I in 1611⁶⁰. This property remained in the Maginnes family until about 1685 when Bryan died unmarried and the property passed to his sister Ellen who had married Captain William Hamilton of Erenagh, [perhaps in County Down near Downpatrick] from Ayrshire. Her son James, Earl of Clanbrassil, had a daughter, Lady Anne Hamilton, who survived her brother James and became his heiress, who had married Robert Jocelyn in 1752⁶¹. Thus the Jocelyns became entitled to the Tollymore estate. Robert Jocelyn was later created the first Earl of Roden in 1771. From Brian McHugh Magennis Bryansford is named.

The Earl of Roden was no pauper, and eventually owned 8,903 acres in Ireland.

Ardently evangelical, Earl Roden was alleged to be the driving force behind the "Bread and Butter Reformation". His third son Percy Jocelyn was bishop of Clogher and caused a huge scandal when on 19 July 1822 he was caught in a compromising position with a guardsman in the White Hart public house in Westminster. The scandal was all the greater because some years earlier the bishop had had is servant flogged through the streets of Dublin and imprisoned for two years for the "libel" of accusing Jocelyn of making an improper proposal⁶².

THE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE

In 1593 Elizabeth I sent an army to Ireland, one of its officers was Sir Moyses Hill who took an Irish wife and bought large areas of land. Sir Moyses' son, Peter Hill, began the development of Hillsborough and in 1630 he built the fort to protect the main road between Carrickfergus and Dublin. Colonel Arthur Hill inherited the estate and in 1662 he built St. Malachi's Church. Further construction on the fort was carried out by Colonel Arthur Hill who was made Constable of the Fort by King Charles II. In 1758 Wills Hill, Earl of Hillsborough reconstructed the gatehouse of the fort and started the construction of Hillsborough Castle. Over the next few years the rebuilding of the parish church commenced and the Market House was built in the square as a centre for the linen trade. Wills was the Secretary of State for America during the struggle for independence and this led to a visit to Hillsborough in January 1772 by Benjamin Franklin. Wills is credited with the invention of the screw top bottle and in 1789 he became the first Marquis of Downshire. The Hill family remained in Hillsborough for many years and today monuments to the third and fourth Marquises are to be found in the village. Hillsborough Castle was sold to the Northern Ireland Government in 1924 by the seventh Marquis of Downshire for use as the official residence of the Governor.

Trevor Hill, the eldest son of Anne Trevor and Michael Hill, was created the 1st Viscount Hillsborough. Their second son, Arthur Hill, inherited the Brynkinalt Estates and was created the 1st Viscount Dungannon of the 2nd Creation. Arthur Hill's son was created the 1st Marquis of Downshire in 1789.

However, Lord Dungannon's son, Arthur, died before he could claim his inheritance. On the death of Lord Dungannon in 1771, the title passed to his grandson, Arthur Hill-Trevor.

Arthur, 2nd Viscount Dungannon of the 2nd Creation, was married to Charlotte, daughter of the 1st Baron Southampton, a descendant of Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, the natural son of King Charles II and Barbara Villiers.

Arthur Blundell Sandys Trumbull, 3rd Marquis of Downshire, KP, DCL, and Lord Lieutenant of Downshire, travelled from Hillsborough Castle to attend the sessions. He had been colonel of the Royal Downshire Militia in 1793⁶³.

The Estate of the Marquis of Downshire is given⁶⁴ c. 1850 as including the following townlands: -

Banbridge, Fortescue and part of Upper Iveagh Estates

⁶³ Alexander Knox, op.cit.

PRONI, website, –I have corrected/standardized the spelling where I could. An asterisk* indicates that I have not been able to confirm the identity of the townland. It is unlikely that the holdings of major landowners would have altered much between 1824 and 1850. I have highlighted those townlands referred to in the text of the Book.

Signed no summonses

In reality he probably tied in his visits to the court with holidays in Hilltown in August 1825.

Of the others justices who sign summonses or attend at sittings I have been able to learn very little.

William Beers, of Brook Cottage, Newcastle, Co. Down, by his handwriting, seems to have been very old and nearly blind at this time. Was he the father of Rev. James Annesley Beers, rector of Kilcoo in the 1850s and of William Beers of Brook Cottage, gentleman?

Reverend Hannington Elijah Boyd of Parsonage, Dromara, Co. Down was born in 1770. He was married on 24th October 1815 to Mary Mortimer Boyd who was born in 1798. They had at least one daughter Margaret Gillespie who died at the age of 26. He was rector of the parish of Dromara/Magherahamlet for 54 years before he died on 29th July 1864 at the age of 94 years⁶⁹. He was a school patron and a magistrate in 1836. When we meet him he is aged 54 years.

Thomas Scott of Kinghill, Rathfriland.

He seems to be the Captain Thomas Scott of King's Hill referred to in Pigot & Co.'s Directory of 1824. Perhaps he is the same Thomas Scott then of Drumballyroney who was a magistrate at Rathfriland Petty Sessions on 1st July 1845.

LEGAL COSTS

It is clear from the summonses in which there is reference to costs, in these cases by way of outlay to the Clerk, that the costs charged are as follows:_

The value of money vis- \hat{a} -vis legal costs and expenses is best judged by looking at the costs in actions in other courts.

I compare these figure with the costs incurred by the Defendant, James Cumine⁷⁵ in the suit of John Jack as lessee of Michael Cahill and of James Wallace and Hugh Wallace in the High Court in Dublin, the Court of Law Exchequer, concerning the title to a lease of Sheepland Mill and lands in Loughmoney and Carrowcarlin, Co. Down The acting ran from 21 February 1818 until 20 May 1819 when the Plaintiff's attorney's Bill of Costs of £355. 6s. 6d was reduced after taxation to £133.12s.5d. Thereafter the action "rumbled on" in the Court of Common Pleas until 27 June 1821 when it was finally disposed of. The Defendant's attorney, Richard Keown, charged his client over £150.0s 0d for representing him in the matters.

COURT HOUSES AND MARKET HOUSES

[Extracts from Court Houses and Market Houses of the Province of Ulster, by C E B Brett, published by the Ulster Architectural Heritage Society in 1973.]

It is a most curious reversal of history that the regulation of marketing, now regarded as a matter for free enterprise, was originally a closely-guarded prerogative of the crown; whereas the administration of justice, now a prerogative of the crown, was originally left largely to private enterprise. The market system in Ireland, as in most of Europe, grew up by means of royal grants of monopolies to individuals. These monopolies were valuable. by virtue of the right to levy tolls on all who brought goods to market; they were guarded with great jealousy. Whenever any grant of a new market or toll was solicited from the Crown it was necessary to inquire by a jury whether the grant would be prejudicial to the King or to the owners of neighbouring markets. Bracton, who died in 1268, says that a market will be a nuisance if set up within six and two-thirds miles of an existing market, because 'an ordinary day's walk may be taken at twenty miles, and, dividing the time into three portions, the morning will be used going to market, the middle of the day in buying and selling, and the other third part of the time in returning home. The right to hold a fair or market was accompanied by the right to conduct a Court of Pie-Poudre, at which the steward adjudicated on commercial disputes and disturbances arising in the market; the cases had to be heard there and then; the court fees constituted a useful source of revenue for market owners.

...The court system in Ulster has changed greatly over the past two centuries. Today, in Northern Ireland, the system comprises the High Court jurisdiction in Belfast; the periodic Assizes held by High Court judges in the county towns; the regular county courts; and the petty sessions districts, where courts are presided over by resident magistrates. The structure in the Republic is, for all practical purposes, similar, although there the High Court sits of course in Dublin and not in the counties of Ulster.

Before the great reforming Judicature Act of 1877 there were six ancient superior courts in Ireland, all with their seats in Dublin: Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, Admiralty, and the Prerogative Court. To these had been added, as the nineteenth century progressed, the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency; the Landed Estates Court; and the Probate Court. The next layer down comprised the assistant barristers, first appointed in 1787 in disturbed areas, whose office gradually evolved so that a hundred years later they were renamed County Court Judges. Magistrates of police were first appointed, again in areas of disturbance, in 1814; by 1853 they had evolved into resident magistrates. Justices of the Peace, unpaid amateurs, were supposed, in Ireland as in England, to provide the groundwork of the system; but this did not work well, for too many of the gentry were absentees, and too many of the justices were licensees. So the nineteenth century saw a steady erosion of the powers of justices of the peace in favour of salaried magistrates. Until their abolition in 1859, a bewildering network of manor courts and courts baron dealt with the less important civil cases. Their authority derived originally from crown grants to landowners: like the right to hold markets, they went with the premises. In many instances, the original grants or letters patent had been lost or forgotten, and there was uncertainty as to the jurisdiction (both pecuniary) territorial and they conferred.

The Parliamentary Gazetteer of Ireland, published in three volumes in 1845, contains an excellent concise account of the legal system as it then existed. It also contains some interesting statistics. In 1841, the census enumeration of 'persons at and above 15 years of age, who ministered to justice,' exhibits: 29 judges, 69 stipendiary magistrates, 2 mayors, 16 sherrifs, 24 coroners, 14 seneschals, 754 barristers, 32 proctors, 2,572 attorneys, 24 clerks of the peace, 43 officers in courts of justice, 1 consular agent, 26 public notaries, 87 scriveners, 12 clerks of petty sessions, 147 law clerks, 3,806 excise and stamp officers, 33 civic officers, 9 inspectors of weights and measures, 9,721 constabulary and police, 1,398 bailiffs, 214 city constables, 6 town serjeants, 477 jailkeepers, 4 serjeants-at-mace, and 21 watchmen. This list poses some imponderable questions. For example, how on earth did 2,572 attorneys manage to conduct their business with only 87 scriveners and 147 law clerks - that is, one employee to every eleven solicitors - amongst the lot of them?

THE DEPOSITION OF WILLIAM McNALLY⁸³

County of Down, to Wit:

The DEPOSITION of WILLIAM M'NALLY, who, being sworn on the Holy Evangelists, deposes that he was born near the town of BRIANSFORD, where he has since resided, and is by trade a Blacksmith. Deponent saith that he is now and always has been a Roman Catholic; having been brought up in the profession of that faith. Deponent swears that lie was desired to go to Tullymore, that he might speak to Mrs. KEOWN, that he accordingly went to her house, and that not finding her at home, he went to Mrs. McCreight's house, in New-Castle, to endeavour to see the said Mrs. KEOWN, and Deponent saith that he was disappointed in doing so; but that he was directed to go into a room, where he found the Rev. A. M'CREIGHT, who introduced the subject of Religion to Deponent, and recommended to him that he should join the Church of England, and become a Protestant, saying that he would send some person to speak to Deponent. Shortly after this, a man of the name of HART, who keeps a school at Briansford, came to Deponent, and spoke to him at different times relative to his, Deponent's, change of Religion; and that the said HART stated he became a Protestant, having been a Roman Catholic, and that he was much benefitted by doing so, having received several sums of money upon that account, and a great deal of friendship - and the Deponent saith that he, the said HART, declared that he, the Deponent, might depend upon getting good FRIENDS, and pointed out the advantages which had arisen to himself, adding particularly that Deponent should get a better house than he had, with LORD Roden's Work and Forge, if he conformed to the Protestant Religion. Deponent further saith, that shortly after the above occurrences his wife and he went to Tullymore to Mrs. Keown, being desired to do so; this event occurred upon an evening in last week - Deponent saith that they there met the Rev. A. M'CREIGHT, who asked him, Deponent, if he had made up his mind to go to Church, and Deponent said lie thought lie partly had; and after some hesitation on the part of himself and his wife, they consented to go to Church on the following Sunday, whereupon the Rev. A. McCreight desired Mrs. Keown, who was present, to go for the clothes, which she had purchased for Deponent's wife - and that Mr. McCreight strictly charged Deponent and his wife to keep secret the circumstances of getting the clothes - and that it could never be known, as they might go as far as Clough, and pretend that they had gone to Downpatrick to purchase them. Deponent further saith, that the said Rev. A. M'CREIGHT had offered on some occasion to procure for him the work of Messrs. KEOWN, GIBBONS, and, indeed, of all the respectable Protestants of the neighbourhood; and made him several promises of protection on condition of his reading his Recantation. Deponent likewise saith, that after his wife had received the clothes, he was desired to go to work in the garden of Mrs. McCreight, of New-Castle, in order that he might be out of the way of the PRIEST, or others, who might alter his determination of going to Church -Sworn before me this 30th May, 1827.

E. S. RUTHVEN.

His WILLIAM X M'NALLY, Mark.
